Corvette Ohana,

First off, I want to thank Diana Adams for stepping up and doing the Editor job for the club. It is a job that results in people judging your efforts with little assistance offered. Diana took the job when no one else offered to do it and through constant refinement made the editor position her own. Diana has had to step away from the position recently and I want to thank her for her efforts.

This month's article has not come easily to me. I have had to travel a lot for work and the car has sat in its garage for almost the entire month of April, coming out only once. In all of the travels I have done, I have seen a few other Corvettes around (the 78 in Canberra was a bit of a shocker as was the 75 in Korea) but nothing like when I am home. I guess I must preface that with the concept that I generally drive by three Corvettes on the road to my home every day. The more I travel the more I have seen cars and crossovers from Toyota, Kia, Hyundai, and Tesla's dominating the roadways. They all meet basic transportation needs of people, but to me something is missing.

It is kind of hard for me to put my finger on what exactly is missing. Passion is probably part of it, but I think it is slightly more. Those vehicles are almost appliances...they do their job and when they have difficulty doing their job or can no longer do it they are unceremoniously disposed of. The Corvette is different. People may upgrade their Corvettes, or in the case of a few of our club members, add to their collection of cars. Most of us have striven to get our cars as well. We aren't just getting a basic runabout. We are getting a Corvette...a car we have desired, and many have longed for years. It is why someone in Canberra Australia drove a 45-year-old car to work and people stopped to check it out. It is something special.

This passion for the car is something we all should share and something we should use as a unifying factor. Through my travels of the Pacific, I have seen an undeniable truth...if you look for common ground, you will find it. Unfortunately, another truth also exists and that is if you look for differences, you will find them as well. Our shared passion for the car should unite us where the myriad of differences in our world could divide us.

This article did not go the way I thought it would, but it probably turned out better than what I surmised I might write about. I thought I might write about car movies and the Corvette not being included in a bunch of great new releases, but this deeper concept is probably a bit better.

Initial 1995 Blueprint

Corvette Land

Did you know that at one point, National Corvette Museum founders dreamed so big there were plans for a Corvette Land theme park, which included a water slide. This early blueprint, provided by the Museum Collections Team, illustrates the size, scope, and imagination of that plan.
